LISA ANCHIN

Hodgepodge: Illustrations for Children

May 15–September 30, 2007

Lisa Anchin is an aspiring children's book illustrator and writer whose illustrations have appeared in various children's magazines and educational materials.

Born and raised on Long Island, Ms. Anchin was fed a steady diet of silly rhymes and fine art throughout her childhood. After graduating from Smith College in 2004 with a degree in art, she began taking children's illustration courses in New York, and the two elements of her upbringing came together in a colorful explosion of children's art. Ms. Anchin has written and illustrated a number of children's stories that she hopes to publish.

“Hodgepodge: Illustrations for Children” is an exhibit of the artist’s recent work. The bright and whimsical gouache paintings provide colorful accompaniments to her own writing and other well-known children's poems.

Ms. Anchin currently lives on Long Island. When not at work in the 2' x 2' space on her desk that serves as her studio, you might find her at local bookstores and libraries avidly perusing the children's section.
